Torre de los Espejos de Utebo, vuestro instituto, queremos transmitir nuestro más sincero agradecimiento a los 145 participantes de esta bonita y literaria iniciativa. Asimismo, deseamos haceros llegar, de alguna manera, el buen sabor de boca que el interés mostrado por todos vosotros, el esfuerzo realizado y los relatos tan ilustrativos que habéis creado ha dejado en todos vuestros profesores.

Habéis desplegado un gran potencial literario sembrado de grandes dosis de ingenio que junto a una esmerada corrección léxica y gramatical nos ha puesto en verdaderos apuros para decantarnos por un único ganador de cada categoría. Éste es, sin duda, el resultado que se obtiene cuando sacáis lo mejor de vosotros mismos. Por esta razón, queremos animaros a que nunca dejéis de sentir, de escribir y de transmitir todos vuestros pensamientos y sensaciones con esa alma que los impregna y que los hace tan particulares de cada uno de vosotros, y a que sigáis disfrutando, maravillándoos e inspirándoos de los mundos y el conocimiento que la lectura pone a vuestra disposición, sea en el idioma que sea.

And suddenly, the lockdown... Get stamped, we don't know what was happening, until the police come and start closing the high school. And suddenly, the lockdown... finished. I woke up with no one at home. I was alone. I called my family and friends but, no one answered. By Ricardo Manero Montero (1º E.S.O. A)

And suddenly, the lockdown... made everybody go insane. It's not that bad they said. Don't worry they said. I'll pass they said. It just a flu, a fever they said. People aren't dying they said. We will survive they said. It's okay they said. And now fifty four years later I am the only human on Earth... or am i?

By Emily Franco González (2º E.S.O. A)

And suddenly, the lockdown... My life was full...I saw something and usually I don,t like it. But I saw someone with it and I like it. I ned it. I get it. After a few time, it bored me. I left it. I forgot it. I was happy.

But now I can,t see anyone. I can,t get anything. It wasn,t a real life. But I undertod too late.

By Claudia León Aguado (2º E.S.O. E)

And suddenly, the lockdown... Nobody knew why was happening... I was scared because it has never happened. I have realized what I love my family and my friends and how difficult it is to stop seeing them. I feel chills at the thought of losing them. Finally many people have died because of this virus. And I am asking... why? for what?

By Erica Berjillo Gimeno (1º E.S.O. D)

And suddenly, the lockdown... started, we didn't know what to do, we were trapped in that weird place with all kinds of bloody monsters." What did they want from us?" i asked myself continuously. We were frightened, we didn't want to go anywhere in that place. And all of a sudden the lights started flickering to finally turn off...

By José Carlos Díaz Guerrero (2º E.S.O. B)

2ª CATEGORÍA (3º & 4º E.S.O.)

Ganador:

And suddenly, the lockdown... when I woke up on my third day I understood everything, almost without realizing, we were trapped in a reality that was not ours. Everything was different... many inner emotions caused by this situation. The great silence of the streets reminded it to us. Only the song of the birds broke so much sadness...

By Héctor Alós Argudo (3º E.S.O. A)

Finalistas:

And suddenly, the lockdown... begins with the alarm state by COVID-19. From this very moment we only see the sun coming through our window. There are no noises or laughter or words on the street. And yet the sounds from outside are wonderful, the air, the birds, the crickets If we can choose, let's stay positive.

By Alejandro Porquet González (3º E.S.O. D)

And suddenly, the lockdown... was over and everyone was able to go quietly with their families and friends. They had been locked up for more than two months and they even had trouble seeing the sunlight, but soon they got used to it. Little by little, the lives of these people began to normalize, but at a certain moment it was not going to be like before, it would take a long time for people to relate to normal.

By Marcos Fantova Azcona (3º E.S.O. E)

And suddenly, the lockdown... It was a cold March morning, when they confirm that there is a pandemic in our country, a virus that attacks the population.

We all have to stay home, we can't go to school ... Well, I think.

The days go by, we cannot leave the house, nor see our friends, nor go outside.

The days pass, nothing entertains me anymore, often boredom. People die, hospitals collapse, everything is chaos, nothing will be like before and in the midst of chaos I hear a voice ...

-¡David, David! wake up, today you don't get to class.

Everything has been a bad dream, the nightmare has ended ...

By David Sánchez Gil (4º E.S.O. E)

3ª CATEGORÍA (1º & 2º Bachillerato)

Ganador:

And suddenly, the lockdown... ended and we could go out. The first night when I came back from a peaceful walk, I opened the door and I heard a strange noise that came from upstairs. Unexpectedly, I felt a puncture in my leg. I saw a man dressed in black with a syringe and then my vision blurred. After all, the danger wasn't outdoors.

By Mario Manero Montero (1º Bach. B)

Finalistas:

And suddenly, the lockdown... of course they were right, clearly these people get what they want. It's been years since the first version of me, now here I am, in a matter of time I'm all over the world. While these move me, they can get rid of me. Others aren't that lucky. Thousands of people, but none of these will ever be forgotten. Of course they were right.

By María García de Vicente (2º Bach. C)

And suddenly, the lockdown... becomes increasingly unbearable. The tension was palpable in the environment after the latest news related to a UFO. Many neighbors had boarded up windows and doors to prevent any "alien" from invading their homes, but what they did not know WAS that they were already among us and that the catastrophe was already inevitable.

By Lucía Jimeno Gracia (2º Bach. A)
